Lesson Development/Procedures (including motivation, modeling, guided practice, and independent practice)

Session One
- Teacher introduces the painting, Renoir’s Luncheon of the Boating Party (name of painting first withheld from the students), and includes a discussion pertaining to art elements.
- Students are invited to share their observations and discuss time, setting, characters, mood, etc.
- The name of the painting and the artist is then introduced to the students. The teacher briefly introduces the concept of how this painting reflects the changing character of French society in the mid to late 19th century. The restaurant welcomes customers of many classes, including a laborer, a businessman, a society man and woman, an artist, an actress, seamstresses, and shop girls. This diverse group reflected a new, modern Parisian society.
- Students discuss how the painting’s name, artist, and background information influence their interpretation of Luncheon of the Boating Party.
- Students seek clues to identify possible character information.
- Students, in groups of seven, strike a tableau pose that captures the composition and feeling of the painting. Each member of the group assumes a pose of a character in the painting.
• The audience is invited to guess the identity of the characters as portrayed.

Session Two
• The teacher distributes writing prompts and copies of the painting.
• The teacher models with the students possible responses to writing prompts and speech bubbles.
• Students work individually or in pairs on responding to writing prompts and speech bubbles.

Closure/Summary
• Students share and discuss responses to writing prompts.
• Students share responses in speech bubbles.
• Students discuss what about the image supports their speech bubbles.

Assessment (Description/Tools)
• Did tableau poses capture the composition and energy of the painting? How so?
• Did written responses to prompts and speech bubbles reflect an understanding of the social atmosphere of the painting and its characters?

Lesson Extensions
• What are the similarities and differences in the painting style, composition, and message of these two paintings?
